Ancient Turkey

Antonio Sagona University of Melbourne, Australia, Paul Zimansky University of New York, Stony Brook, USA

Series: Routledge World Archaeology

Students of antiquity often see ancient Turkey as a bewildering array of cultural complexes. Ancient Turkey brings together in a coherent account the diverse and often fragmented evidence, both archaeological and textual, that forms the basis of our knowledge of the development of ancient Turkey from the first agriculturalists to the end of the Iron Age. Much of the area is now being excavated for the first time, and unlike its neighbours such as Greece and Mesopotamia, Turkey has been very poorly served in terms of comprehensive, up-to-date and accessible discussions of its ancient past. Filling that gap in the literature, Ancient Turkey is a much needed resource for students, providing an up-to-date account of the widespread and extensive archaeological activity in Turkey.

Archaeology by Numbers

Grant S. McCall Tulane University, USA

Strategies for Quantitative Research is a concise and readable textbook on the use of statistics in archaeology and a handbook for professionals in the field aimed at answering commonly occurring questions. With a focus on the logic of statistical inference, which researchers rarely think through before undertaking quantitative analysis, it deals with fundamental issues such as: 1) understanding what kinds of data are common in the field of archaeology, 2) knowing what the goals of various forms of analysis are, and 3) understanding the assumptions of major statistical models.

Archaeological Situations

Archaeological Theory from the Inside Out

Gavin Lucas University of Iceland, Iceland

This book is an introduction to theory in archaeology – but with a difference. Archaeological Situations avoids talking about theory as if it was something you apply but rather as something embedded in archaeological practice from the start. Aimed primarily at undergraduates, this book is the ideal way to engage students with archaeological theory.

The Archaeology of Art

Materials, Practices, Affects

Andrew Meirion Jones , Andrew Cochrane

Series: Themes in Archaeology Series

The Archaeology of Art introduces students to the analysis of visual expression in the archaeological record and charts a fresh prospectus for the study of archaeological art. The topic intercuts almost all areas of archaeological enquiry but is often divided up into disciplinary sub-fields which rarely engage with one another. One of the key arguments of this book is the call for a distinctive 'archaeology of art' based upon key archaeological interpretative principles as opposed to those borrowed from anthropology or art history.

The Archaeology of Seeing

Science and Interpretation, the Past and Contemporary Visual Art

Liliana Janik

This book provides readers with a new and provocative understanding of material culture through exploring visual narratives captured in cave and rock art, sculpture, paintings, and more. The engaging argument draws on current thinking in archaeology on how we can interpret the behaviour of people in the past through their use of material culture, and how this affects our understanding of how we create and see art in the present. Exploring themes of gender, identity and story-telling in visual material culture, this book forces a radical reassessment of how the ability to see makes us and our ancestors human; as such, it will interest lovers of both art and archaeology.

Archaeology and its Discontents

Why Archaeology Matters

John C. Barrett University of Sheffield

Series: Themes in Archaeology Series

Archaeology and its Discontents critically examines the state of archaeology today and its development throughout the twentieth century. It makes a powerful case that understanding how humans have created themselves should be the main purpose of archaeology, and that archaeology matters precisely because of the insights it can offer in this area. The argument is illustrated throughout by reference to the development of the European Neolithic. The book provides a rallying call for archaeologists at all levels, from student to professor and trainee to experienced practitioner.

Archaeological Artefacts as Material Culture

Linda Hurcombe University of Exeter, UK

This book is an introduction to the study of artefacts, setting them in a social context rather than using a purely scientific approach. Drawing on a range of different cultures and extensively illustrated, Archaeological Artefacts and Material Culture covers everything from recovery strategies and recording procedures to interpretation through typology, ethnography and experiment, and every type of material including wood, fibers, bones, hides and adhesives, stone, clay, and metals. Including over seventy illustrations with almost fifty in full colour, this book not only provides the tools an archaeologist will need to interpret past societies from their artefacts, but also a keen appreciation of the beauty and tactility involved in working with these fascinating objects. This is a book no archaeologist should be without, but it will also appeal to anybody interested in the interaction between people and objects. Selected Contents:

Material Evidence

Learning from Archaeological Practice

Edited by Robert Chapman University of Reading, UK,
Alison Wylie University of Washington, USA

Material Evidence takes a resolutely case-based approach, exploring key instances of exemplary practice, critical turning points, and innovative developments in the use of archaeological data as evidence. In doing so, it identifies norms of evidential reasoning that underpin judgments of epistemic credibility in archaeology. Chapters identify a particular aspect of evidential reasoning with which to grapple and to consider, with reference to concrete examples of exemplary or transformative practice. Material Evidence provides answers to the question how do archaeologists make effective use of physical traces and material culture as repositories of evidence?

The Reality of Artifacts

An Archaeological Perspective

Michael Chazan

Artifacts: An Archaeological Perspective develops an argument for the artifact as a status conferred by human engagement with material. It considers artifacts first in terms of their relationship to concepts and cognitive functions and then to the physical body and sense of self. The book builds on latest developments in archaeological research, particularly from the archaeology of human evolution, and integrates this wealth of new archaeological data with new research in cognitive science, haptics, and material culture studies. The volume was developed for undergraduate and graduate courses and will be of interest both to archaeologists and the general reader interested in material culture.

This volume provides a detailed study of the archaeology of Britain and its inshore islands between AD 400 and 1100. For the first time a single-author book treats early medieval Britain as a whole, enabling Carver to show that the primary cultural, political and ideological foundations of the island's population were laid during this time. An Archaeology of the Contemporary Era

Alfredo González-Ruibal Institute of Heritage Sciences of the Spanish National Research Council, Spain.

An Archaeology of the Contemporary Era approaches the contemporary era, between the late nineteenth and twenty-first centuries, as an archaeological age defined by specific material processes. The materiality of our era, the book argues, and particularly its ruins and rubbish, reveals something profound, original and disturbing about humanity. This is the first attempt at describing the contemporary era from an archaeological point of view. Global in scope, the book brings together case studies from every continent and considers sources from peripheral and rarely considered traditions.

The First Maya Civilization

Ritual and Power Before the Classic Period

Francisco Estrada-Belli Boston University, USA

The First Maya Civilization illustrates the latest archaeological finds that force a revision of old theories on the beginnings of Maya civilization. The period archaeologists refer to as the Preclassic (800B.C. – A.D. 200) represents the first of a series of complete cycles of Maya Civilization. Thanks to new data, the massive Preclassic temple pyramids of El Mirador are no longer seen as an unprecedented phenomenon but are the outcome of a gradual process begun several centuries earlier by Lowland farmers. Francisco Estrada-Belli focuses largely on two newly discovered early cities in the eastern part of the Petén, Cival and Holmul, the location of spectacular and early finds by the author, as well as recent discoveries by other Mayanists at San Bartolo, Nakbe, El Mirador and Tikal.

Archaeology of Pacific Oceania

Inhabiting a Sea of Islands

Mike T. Carson Associate Professor of Archaeology at the Richard F. Taitano Micronesian Area Research Center at the University of Guam, Guam.

Series: Routledge World Archaeology

This book integrates a region-wide chronological narrative of the archaeology of Pacific Oceania. How and why did this vast sea of islands, covering nearly one-third of the world's surface, come to be inhabited over the last several millennia, transcending significant change in ecology, demography, and society? What can any or all of the thousands of islands offer as ideal model systems toward comprehending globally significant issues of human-environment relations and coping with changing circumstances of natural and cultural history? A new synthesis of Pacific Oceanic archaeology addresses these questions, based largely on the author's investigations throughout the diverse region.

The British Palaeolithic

Human Societies at the Edge of the Pleistocene World

Paul Pettitt, Mark White

Series: Routledge Archaeology of Northern Europe

The British Palaeolithic provides the first academic synthesis of the entire British Palaeolithic, from the earliest occupation (currently understood to be around 980,000 years ago) to the end of the Ice Age. Landscape and ecology form the canvas for an explicitly interpretative approach aimed at understanding the how different hominin societies addressed the issues of life at the edge of the Pleistocene world. It fills a major gap in teaching resources as well as in research by providing a current synthesis of the latest research on the period. This book represents the culmination of 40 years combined research in this area by two well known experts in the field, and is an important new text for students of British archaeology as well as for students and researchers of the continental Palaeolithic period.
